PROactive PRONUNCIATION

De-Stressed “The”

English speakers tend to reduce the pronunciation to a simple “thuh” when it is followed by a consonant. If the “the” is followed by a vowel, however, it will be pronounced as “thee.” For example, “the cat” is pronounced “thuh”, where “the end” would be pronounced “thee.”

all the way out
at the end of the day
begs the question
but in the meantime
by the way
don’t pass the buck
for the most part
get to the point
going off the grid
gotta face the music
have to bite the bullet he kicked the bucket
he paved the way
he’s all over the place he’s on the run
he’s the cock of the walk he’s under the weather
I call the shots
I’m on the fence
I’m on the job
in the face of fear
it’s all the time
it’s in the air
it’s in the making
it’s off the hook
it’s on the ground
it’s the law of the land
just toe the line
let’s clear the air
let’s just cut to the chase not on the spot
off the beaten track
on the contrary
on the go
on the other hand
one and the same
out of the way
over the counter meds
seize the day
she let the cat out of the bag she made the cut
she’s dressed to the nines shooting the breeze
state of the art
that’s beyond the pale that’s out of the question that’s over the top
that’s so out of the blue under the hood
we’re on the same page
what a pain in the neck you’re on the ball
